Maniac. Menace. Mystery? No more! That's right, true Buglers! Ever since the masked marauder masquerading as Spider-Man dangled with impunity above our city streets-without a permit, might I add-and took the law into his own web-covered hands, yours truly has worked tirelessly to de-mask the myth and reveal the truth. And now we have. Peter Parker. Just a boy.

And now that the coward has been unmasked, will he do his civic duty and answer for his egregious crimes? Will he used his great power to join the police force? The fire department? Fat chance! Will Peter Parker take responsibility for the vandalism and destruction of property those powers have left smoking in his wake? Ha! Don't make me laugh.

Parker wore a mask because he refuses to answer for his actions. He kept his identity hidden because he views himself as above the law. But if the constitution doesn't allow citizens to vote before they've reached the age of 18, why would we continue to let a child decide who is saved and who is guilty?

We know he's made mistakes before. Just ask Quentin Beck. Oh wait, you can't! 'Cause Spidey killed him! So if you don't want to be next, dear reader, join me in this call to the unmasked red-tight wearing monster: Peter Parker, we are the public and we will be YOUR judge and YOUR jury. Call the tip line, folks. Let Parker know you're watching.

REVEAL PARKER'S
BIRTH CERTIFICATION
GAINS TRACTION

While the world still mourns the loss of Mysterio, arguably the greatest superhero this planet has seen and will ever see, a growing constituency of tax-paying New Yorkers have begun to wonder why Peter Parker a.k.a. Spider-Man, continues to walk freely without the borders of our city, using our subways and schools and eating our street vendor's hot dogs. Word is that Parker even eats them plain.

These men, women and children clamouring for justice have come together to start a petition asking that Parker's birth certificate be made public in order to prove whether he has any standing as the self-associated hero of New York City. "He seems like a Jersey kid, honestly," said chef Graham Dugend. "I mean, have you heard that he eats hot dogs without any condiments? Definitely a Jersey thing."

"This petition request by the public definitely and definitively falls under the purview of the Sokovia Accords," claimed Queens layer Ashley Hunt, an expert in maritime law.

The Bugle's own lawyers are investigating any way a FISA request could aid the public's attempt to uncover the truth about this so-called "New Yorker".

We always have been and always will be committed to the facts at any cost.

Donations directed towards our plight for journalistic freedom can be made out to the Daily Bugle or J. Jonah Jameson.

WHO WILL PAY FOR

PARKER'S PANDEMONIUM?

Following the Daily Bugle's brave, earth-shattering live report from our editor in chief - soon-to-be-likely nominated award applicant J. Jonah Jameson, who helped Mysterio reveal Spider-Man to be none other than high schooler Peter Parker - the dutiful citizens of the greatest city in the world demanded answers to their many questions.

Who exactly is this Peter parker? Where did he come from? Is he even human? More importantly, is he even from New York City? Who will pay for all the damage he's caused? Does he have insurance? And finally, where do his lies end?

Because this teenage boy is certainly no "man", as he alleges with his alter-ego moniker "Spider-Man". And wither Parker's refusal to correct his costumed name to "Spider-Boy" or even "Spider-Teen", this paper wonders, what other alternative facts has he wreaked upon the friendly neighbourhood he claimed to protect? And will he foot the bill he owes to this city?

Buglers, we dig through the garbage so you don't have to. And when cross referencing Peter Parker's attendance record with the rise in Spidey-related crime, it's plain as day that the similarities between the two are more than just coincidence. Almost every time Parker was late to school, Spider-Man was seen menacing the New York City populace, from inconveniencing rush-hour ferry traffic to causing untold damage to putting good firefighters out of work by saving cats stuck in trees-prompting some to allege that Spider-Man was actually so depraved as to be kidnapping the cats himself just to save them.

Even after more and more of Parker's lie are revealed and his attendance plummets, he just can't stop himself from continuing his crime spree of wanton malice. During Spider-Man's latest kerfuffle in

“ THAT PARKER KID OWES ME A NEW CAR! ”

Washington Heights, hundreds of cars were destroyed as Parker (Still wearing a mask, for some reason, which prompted many to wonder what he's now hiding under there) left a path of web-slinging destruction in his wake as he wrecked the Alexander Hamilton bridge while assaulting an innocent tentacled man.

"That Parker kid owes me a new car! And some therapy!" sand longtime resident Thomas Gledhill.

"I'm just glad I had some insurance" said shaken victim Lennie Gallowa

MAN BITTEN!

NEW COSTUMED
HERO EMERGING?

DOCTOR'S SAY:
"THAT'S NOT HOW SCIENCE WORKS"

The Daily Bugle has obtained news that a Boston man got himself bitten by a spider-on purpose-while visiting NYC earlier this week. Known only to this paper as "Doug", the individual was admitted to a local hospital with an allergic response after intentionally getting bitten in hopes that he would "save the world like Spider-Man and be a hero in my father's eyes".

This was not the case, as all he ended up with was an unsightly but non-life-threatening swelling of the facial area that doctors began a rigorous regimen of antibiotic cream to combat.

“ I WANTED TO SAVE THE WORLD LIKE SPIDER-MAN & BE A HERO IN MY FATHER'S EYES ”

"We expect him to make a full recovery on his face. His decision-making process is beyond repair." As for his father seeing him as a hero? When asked for a comment, Doug's father said he was "not mad, just disappointed". Ouch. The Daily Bugle doesn't doubt that that hurt worse than the bite itself. While scientists and doctors continue to scramble to understand Peter Parker's powers, they stress that seeking out wile arachnids in hope of becoming the next Spider-Man is "highly dangerous" and

"that's not how science works. While most spider bites are considered harmless, the venom that the brown-rednose and black-widow spiders emit can cause neurological and tissue damage. Currently, health officials are recommending that spider bite victims seek immediate medical treatment in emergency rooms pending further evaluation and tests.

Doug is hoping to be discharged from the hospital soon.

"Friends. Family. Sandwiches from Delmar's. There are the things you really think about when your life flashes before your eyes," he said, before being reminded by doctors that his life did not, in fact, flash before his eyes.

MYSTERIO-MANIA MONTH UPCOMING

Starting next week, the Daily Bugle will be doing our part to help the petition to reveal Peter Parker's birth certificate by running a month-long Mysterio tribute special.

The special will highlight the great things the dimension-hopping hero did for our city, our state, our country, and our world.

And for a limited time, Bugle subscribers can get the special for half the price! We encourage you to send in your kind words and any photos you have of this great hero in action, as well as any donations.

WHO IS MJ?

IS SPIDEY'S NEW GIRLFRIEND
ACTUALLY HIS PARTNER IN CRIME?

Michelle Jones isn't just holding hands with Peter Parker on their way to class-when Parker manages to make it to class, that is.

No, this paper has confirmed multiple sightings of MJ dangling from Spidey's arms as he slings his way across the city sky, leading to the question, Is this woman aiding and abetting Spider-Man in his crimes against decency?

The mainstream media wants you to believe that MJ's an innocent bystander in all of this, but we here at the Bugle push back against that narrative. Little is known about this woman's past besides her affinity for costumed clowns and academic decathalons.

With Parker dropping out of his schools' robotics club and his increased truancy - not to mention his high records of detention when he occassionally deems school worth of his time - we ask you, could MJ really be the brains of the whole Spider-Man operation? They do say that behind every costumed vigilante man is a woman pulling the webs.

So stay tuned, Buglers, as we will keep you posted with further developments in our investigation into the mysterious MJ.

LONDON GOVT:

PAY UP PARKER!

OPEN LETTER REVEALS LINGERING ANGER ABOUT SPIDEY'S BRIDGE BUST-UP

London is still reeling from the atrocities perpetrated upon by the new menace formerly known as Spider-Man. Allow men to be perfectly clear: the unmasked boy Peter Parker is by no means a hero.

Let this be my public demand that Parker be made to pay for the damages he inflicted upon our cultural cornerstone. Neither I nor my constituents shall rest until this injustice is righted. We could forgive the occasional smashed sidewalk or broken phone box. But to set fire to the Tower Bridge, the very pinnacle of British History and tradition? This is a slap in the face for anyone who dares to call themselves a Londoner.

We must be diligent in our demand for restitution. We Know who Parker is now. Every penny to the boy's name should go toward rebuilding our city.

If he is spotted spending a dime on a candy bar or a quarter on a pinball machine or a dollar for a quart of milk-that is how much things cost these days, is it not?-he should be hauled into court and made to answer for his recalcitrant spending while London taxpayers hand over their pounds to clean up his crimes. None of us is safe while arrogant "superheroes" are allowed to roam through our fair city. I implore you, my fair Londoners, to take to the streets, talk to your friends and family, and share it on your social media:

We demand retribution from Spider-Man! We demand that Peter Parker's bank account be emptied and the city's coffers be refilled! The upcoming election has nothing to do with why I am writing this letter.

SUPERHEROES TO BLAME FOR AUTO-CLAIM INFLUX

A huge spike in insurance claims happens every time there's a superhero battle in New York City, according to Liberty Mutual's latest report.

While the insurance company didn't point fingers, the Daily Bugle gathers that there's no one to blame but Peter Parker, a.k.a Spider-Man. His reckless behaviour near the 18th street exit left hundreds of car stranded on Monday. Luckily, New Yorkers can take a photo of any damage and file a claim in the Liverty Mutual app.

Automobiles aren't the only property Spider-Man has damaged of late. He was recently seen knocking over a community "Borrow a Book" Box during a pursuit. Downtown teacher Maria Rapour said the book case took her class "weeks to build"

CLEANER STUCK IN STICKY STREET JOB

BY CASSI NORMAN

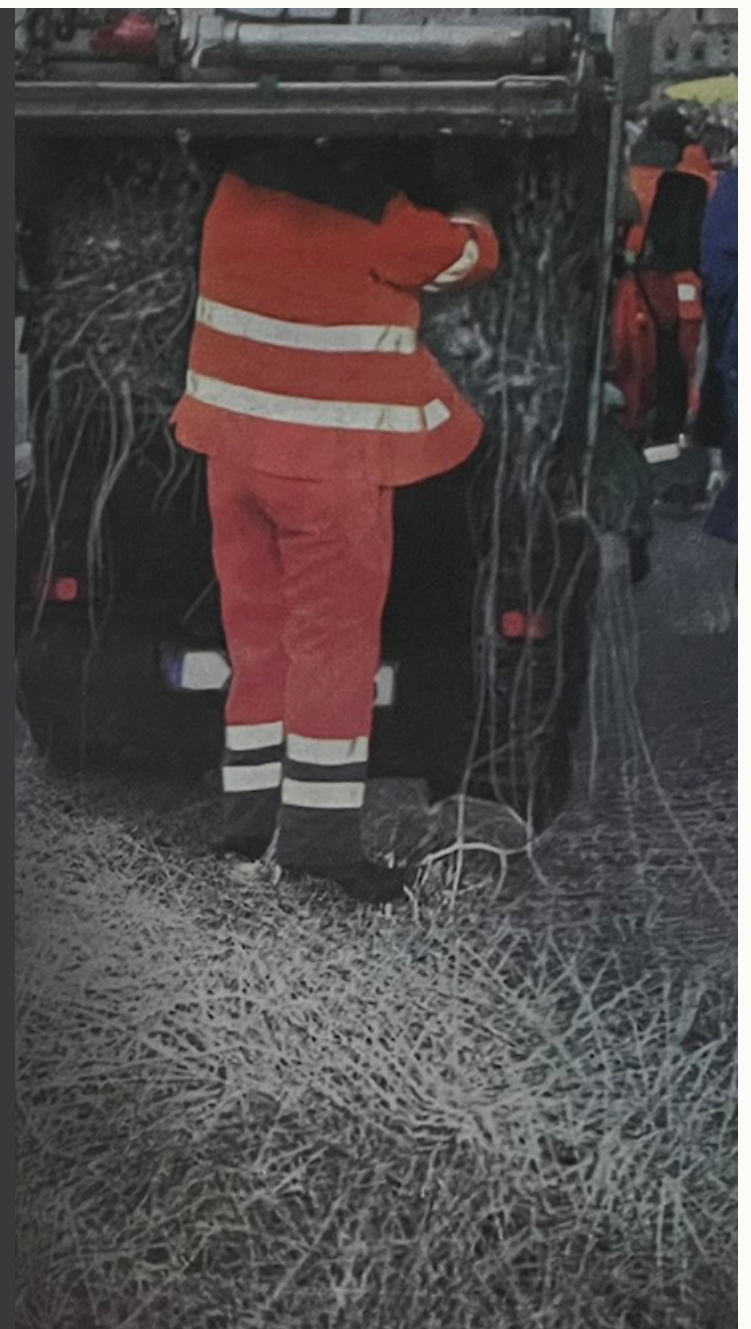

Red ruffian Spider-Man leaves about 3,000 yards of highly adhesive webbing around the city after a single swing session, and the cleanup falls to the stalwart street cleaner Ed King. It's a thankless job, and few New Yorkers appreciate just how messy it can be.

"After Spider-Man is done swinging through town like he owns the place, it falls to hardworking Americans to pick up the pieces," said King. "And this stuff is sticky. I've lost count of the number of times I've ended up in a ball of Spider-Man's webs."

The job of King and other street cleaners usually entails clearing the streets of the refuse left by New Yorkers. But since Spider-Man began traversing the city, the disposal of his long and tangled web trails has become a full-time gig.

Calls are growing for the city to find a de-webbing committee that will take some of the strain off honest workers like King.

"I didn't sign up for this," the 32-year-old said. "I wish Spider-Man would buzz off so I don't have to take so many showers."

DRONE PERCEPTION TAKES A NOSEDIVE

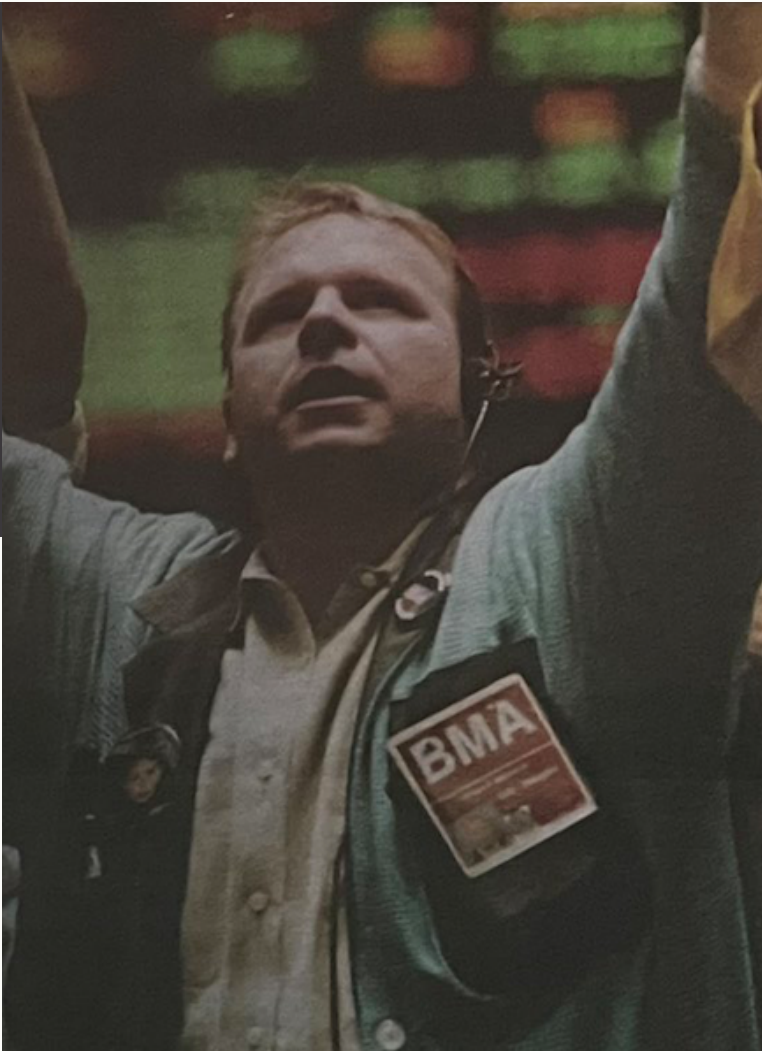

CAN THEY COME BACK FROM THIS? THE PEOPLE SAY NO!

Since Parker's drones have been deemed directly responsible for the destruction of the Tower Bridge in London, public concerns are growing about unmanned aerial vehicles (UAVs, which are commonly referred to as "Drones").

People are not only fearful of the damage drones can cause but also concerned about the larger issue of privacy. They can easily fly by your window and watch as you log in to your bank accounts and social media profiles.

Business analyst Harry McKeon said, "Companies who face this kind of external pressure need to make a shift to accommodate the change in public opinion." He added, "Identity theft is a real threat, and drone companies need to go the extra mile to offer solutions, like creating stricter no-fly zones and partnering with insurance firms, which can provide identity-theft protection."

BODEGA FOOT TRAFFIC SEES SURPRISING RISE

New York City bodegas, a proud staple of the city, have seen a resurgence this year after a decade of stagnancy. Foot traffic is up by 25% from this time last year, and investors are growing confident that there's still room in the marketplace for more bodega storefronts as New Yorkers clamor for their neighbourhood groceries and sandwiches. Mr. Delmar of Delmar's Deli & Grill in Queens said that the recent trend has been a "long time coming. We make the best sandwiches in the borough. Who wouldn't want a good sandwich for an even better price!" This is Delmar's second swing at the bodega life, as a brawl between Spider-Man and a gang of bank robbers destroyed his first store, the longtime staple Delmar's Deli-Grocery. "We still sell groceries. But now we have a grill too," said the neighbourhood stalwart. "That's why it's called Delmar's Deli & Grill."

SQUAWK OF THE TOWN

EMU ADOPTIONS ON THE RISE

As New York City house prices continue to increase, many residents are moving to more rural areas.

With the change in scenery comes a change in pets. Tiny 15-pound apartment dogs are being overlooked for something a lot larger: emus. While emus are not exactly known for their calm temperament, ex-New Yorkers like Kristen Godfery see beauty in these big birds. "I've always had pugs in the family, so it's quite the change. But there's something so magical and prehistoric about emus."

Godfery isn't alone. The Burtons, a family of six who recently moved to New Jersey, have not one but two emus. "The kids saw that Liberty Mutual ad with the emu and asked if we could get one. We ended up with two, as they were sisters and we didn't want to separate them."

Emu expert Janelle Mais said the birds and complex creatures. "Emus can be very moody and picky about food, so you're constantly walking on eggshells trying to work out what won't upset them. Not their eggshells," She added.

Mais warned that emus grow up to almost six feet tall and can be "downright messy and completely unable to be house trained," so it's best to stick with a dog, cat or houseplant.

SPIDER VICTIM

CLAIMS THE BOY VIGILANTE IS A "HERO"

Queens resident Nicole Dietrich continues to claim that she was saved by Spider-Man when a car allegedly failed to stop at a red light. While local officials on the case neither confirmed nor denied Dietrich's claim, they did say that there were "other considerations at play."

Dietrich was on her way home to start dinner when Parker swung in wearing his traditional red-and-blue costume, grabbing Ms. Dietrich right off the street.

When asked how being swung was and if there were any residual effects, Dietrich said that swinging with Spidey did make her dizzy, but she claimed without evidence that getting hit by a car would've probably made her even dizzier. And what happened to her dinner? Well, Dietrich was so rattled by the whole affair she didn't eat her dinner.

So you can now add nutritional negligence to the list of crimes Spider-Man has strewn across our city.

'SAVIES' THE NEW SELFIES

There's a burgeoning new trend hitting social media platforms called "savies"- a selfie you take while getting saved by a superhero.

Young men and women are desperate to get one to increase their online social presence. More troubling is the fact that they're pretending they're in danger so they can get saved for the photo in the first place, distracting superheroes from true emergencies. Youth psychologist Jim King said that savies "are a very disturbing window into what social media has done to our children. They'll do anything for likes." Twenty-year-old Rachel Fawcett started the savie trend in 2019 when she took a snap with Mysterio in Italy. Her single photo garnered thousands of likes, which spurred other foolish young adults to follow suit. County police urge people to ignore this silly trend and to stick to workout selfies.

I disagree with last week's story "New York Needs Better Heroes". I think Spider-Man is doing a perfect job. What New Yorkers do need is quality insurance. It's the one way we can protect our stuff when Spider-Man can't make it. Seriously he's one guy in a city of 8+ million.

Spider-Man's Wardrobe

Regarding last week's article "Spider-Man's New Look" (column 3, December 1) I a appalled at how many outfits Spider-Man has.

Our beautiful city is under threat, and he's out there acting like it's Fashion Week every week! Each time I see his photo in the paper, he's in a new suit. Red, then black, then black with gold trim.

Just stick to one outfit, and get on with saving the day! - Janine D, New Jersey Video Doctor? Who's coughing now?

As a truther myself, I did a forensic analysis of the coded metadata of the Mysterio upload to see what other revelations Quentin Beck possibly left for us. And while many in my community claim that the glitch you see at the time of 0011 seconds is clear evidence of video doctoring, after my review, I believe that the glitch was simply damage caused by Spider-Man's destructive drone technology and not anything nefarious on the part of the heroic Mysterio.

Rest in peace, my man. Loved the cape. - William R, undisclosed location

SPIDER-WEB CRAFT CRAZE

PEOPLE SAY I'M AN ODDBALL

A small-time New York City artist has started a new trend: web macrame, made by upcycling the discarded webs of Spider-Man.

"I was walking to the craft shop to buy some twine, when I saw three feet o webbing on the ground and thought to myself, "Why not?"" said Daney. "My husband gave me some weird looks at first, but since the online sales started flooding in, he's out there collecting webs with me.

"MY HUSBAND GAVE ME WEIRD LOOKS."

The local artist is applying for a patent for her web-macrame design, as she has seen knockoff web decor popping up across the internet. "I've worked hard to carve out this corner of the craft market. To see others copying me is a kick in the guts."

This isn't the first time the Daily Bugle has seen Spider-Man's webs being used. A Florida man made headlines in 2018 after selling Spider-Man's webbing for a whopping $150 a foot in his Halloween store. Despite the high price, the store sold out in two hours.

FLASHPOINT: A MEMOIR

Is the best friend of Spider-Boy for real?

This explosive, revelatory discovery that Spider-Man's true identity is high school teen Peter Parker has caused journalists across the world to descend on the Big Apple in hopes of unearthing anything new about the local Queens resident. But has the best story of the teen Avenger already been written? No. Flash Thompson's memoir, entitled "Flashpoint: A Memoir - My Life as Peter Parker's Best Friend" is a mundane account of his time as Peter Parker's pal. Thompson told this paper that "it's no coincidence Peter Parker's my best friend and is also Spider-Man while I'm Spider-Man's number one fan and run Spider-Man's top fan social media account, SpideyNo1Fan. What more proof do you need?" Cowritten by author Chris Freyer, influencer Thompson's account is light on the details and heavy on the iconography, and has a large "all persons fictitious" disclaimer in the post-notes, which Thompson says exists purely for "legal reasons"
